HINDOO SERVANTS.

Must Be Handled Roughly, as They Don' Appreciate Kindness.

"To-day the Hindoo servant is a lazy, good-for-nothing thief, and I will tell you how to handle him," said the general traffic manager of the Southern India railway in his office at Madras. India, to an Enquirer representative who was in the orient several months ago and has just returned to this city. Continuing, he said: "I have seen a good deal of change in the country during my 50 years' residence here, and one of the most remarkable changes has been in the treatment of servants. A few years ago in the good, old days of the Madras presidency, if a servant disobeyed his master he would have been strung up and whipped. If the whipping caused death, a fine of seven rupees ($1.75 in American money, according to present value,) would have been imposed. "If, however, the servant's masterdid not care to run the risk of having to pay the fine, which was considered a big sum for the life of a Hindoo in those days, all he had to do was to send the offending servant with a note to the police magistrate, and an official whipper would return with Sammy. The whole appliances for whipping were kept at the police department. Sammy would be made to carry his own whipping post. Flog him hard? I should say they would. The general average would be 30 lashes, and if the master thought that the rascal was not punished enough he would order 30 more lashes. If the Hindoo died from the effects of this punishment, why, there was no fine to pay, and it was simply 'good riddance of bad rubbish.' But look at the condition of things now. The rascally Hindoo will stand up and sass you.

"You ask why. It is because the Hindoo whipping post has been abolished. At present the offending Hindoo is brought before a rajah or judge of his own race, and of course he will not be severe on his countryman.

"The only way that these Hindoo servants can be made to obey is to beat and kick them. You cannot show them kindness or they at once put you down as a softie. Take my advice, as long as you remain in India and your servants are lax in their work, you just make them acquainted with the toe of your

The old gentleman sighed as he re called the former manner of dealing with servants. His tone of voice and looks indicated that he would like it reestablished. His advice was both good and true, for Hindoo servants do not appreciate kindness, and understand only a kick when you desire them to obey. A "Sahib" (master) who will not give his servant a kick or a slap has no standing with the Hindoo, and is counted by them as "a no-good Sahib."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Brave Volunteers. It is gratifying to know that if wo had declared war with Great Britain we might have counted upon the alliance of at least one Kickapoo brave and one hero of the tribe of Sacs and Foxes, for they have written to the president asking for a subvention of blankets and expressing their readiness to take the warpath immediately. Such a reinforcement would not amount to much in point of numbers, but its moral significance would count for something. The isolated condition of England has of late compelled attention. She has no friends among the European nationalities, and it now seems apparent that she has none among the American wigwams, where it was formerly supposed that she pre-served a good deal of influence. A candid survey of the situation and its causes will no doubt assure her that she deserves her unpopularity. She must correct her overreaching ways before she can expect to have any friends, either among her sister nationalities the alien and sporadic aborigines sary to have large farms to make not taxed. The country will have to profits, but to concentrate the labor and decline the services of the two volun-teering braves for the present, but Great Britain may see in their offer what is in store for her if she should ever show a disposition to break the what is in store for her if she should ever show a disposition to break the peace.—N. Y. Tribune.

FARM AND GARDEN

THE FIVE-ACRE FARM.

low It Can Be Made to Yield Hand To make the most of a small farm it must be made to yield its fruits at such times as they are the most valuable, which means to prolong the season to the greatest possible extent consistent with economy. There is great pleasure and profit in having vegetables both early and late. There is a decided relish in very early vegetables, if of our own production, and providing they can be produced at a reasonable price. The hotbed meets all these conditions; when properly managed it will furnish many egetables nearly two months in advance of the garden, and of much better quality, because they are grown more quickly and at a moderate cost. But the hotbed to be profitable must be made useful the entire season, or at least from March to January. After it has furnished us with an early crop of radishes and lettuce, together with plants for early cabbage, cauliflower and tomatoes, it can be made highly useful for cucumbers, not our common garden varieties, but the English frame sorts, which do finely with us in sum mer when grown in a frame, which should be kept well shaded on sunny days. We have grown as large and wellshaped cucumbers in these frames as we have ever seen grown in the green-

If cucumbers are not desired, sow a few seeds of tomatoes about the 1st of June, not later than the 10th; these will ripen their first fruits upon the approach of frost, when the sash should be put on, and the season of tomatoes can be prolonged for at least a month. After these are gone the frame can be filled with lettuce plants, which should be in readiness, and, with little protection, the hotbed will furnish a supply during December.

A goodly number of cold frames should be in readiness in spring to receive the young plants of tomatoes, cabpage and cauliflower, in order to harden them off before transferring them to the garden; this will afford the lettuce all the room it will require for heading, as the other plants should be sown in alternate rows in order to make all the space useful. The importance of this kind of farm ing is but little understood or appre ciated. It is carried on extensively near all large cities, and is made profitable by those who understand it. But it is doubly valuable to the small farmer who grows not so much for profit as for pleasure, for those who are willing to pay to their gardeners what their vegetables and small fruits would cost them in the market, and the rental of the farm besides, for the satisfaction there is in having everything fresh and strictly first-class in every respect.-Rura' Farmer.

TIGHT HAY CHUTE.

How to Prevent the Escape of Fine Dust and Chaff.

Where the hay is stored in the second story hay chutes must be provided for each stall. There is a right and a wrong way to build these. The cut shows the right way. Let them grow larger as they descend, and then the hay will not catch or clog in them. At the bottom have an incline to throw the hay toward the opening, as shown. Have a guard over the top of chutes to keep people from walking into them when moving about on the floor overhead. One sometimes sees stables where the hay is thrown down an opening over the horse's head, without the use of a chute at all. As a result the mane, foretop and hair of the herse's head is filled with dust, chaff and spears of hay-a slovenly method. Sometimes, also, one sees a chute made of slats. This is much better than a simple opening. But dust and chaff will escape through the slats and get on to the horse. Better do the work thoroughly and make a tight chute.—N. Y. Tribune.

Waldo Brown says that there is less risk of loss of fall litters than of those dropped in the spring, for in March and April we are liable to severe storms and sudden changes in temperature, and it is more difficult to keep the sows in a healthy condition through the winter than in summer, when succulent food is abundant.—Farmer's Voice.

When he stood up there was a murmur of "Oom Peet." and a respectful pause. "The English flag," he said, with an air of placid certainty, "is white." There was a general cry of white." There was a general cry of expostulation, which had no sort of effect on the old warrior. "Don't I know?" he asked, gently; "I have seen it—seen it three times; once at Majuba, once at Bronkerspruit and once at Doornkop. Each time it was hoisted and each time it was white."
